Subject: New MDNR Program Saves Money & Makes Environmental Compliance Easier

The Missouri Department of Natural Resources (MDNR) is now using a program that gives you more flexibility in managing contaminated properties and makes cleanups potentially cheaper.

The new program, called MRBCA, takes into account a property owner's ability to control exposures to contamination at his or her property. MRBCA stands for Missouri Risk-Based Corrective Action.

This program gives site managers the ability to make full use of risk-based science and site controls, rather than exclusive use of costly remediation technology, to put unused or underused properties safely back on productive rolls in neighborhoods, re-development projects, urban areas, and industry-owned facilities.

Properties that were formerly unrecoverable due to technical impracticability or overwhelming remediation costs, may now safely be put into use.

An information packet and technical guidance are available now.
